Research Interests

I am a postdoctoral researcher currently serving as a Visiting Scholar with the Data Interaction Group at Carnegie Mellon University's Human-Computer Interaction Institute (HCII). I received my Ph.D. in Computer Science and Engineering from Seoul National University, where I was advised by Prof. Jinwook Seo in the Human-Computer Interaction Lab. My research lies at the intersection of visual analytics, network analysis, and human-centered AI. I develop methods that help people understand complex, evolving information. Particularly, I focus on visual analytics for dynamic graphs that collaborate with AI to adapt information and visual representations to users' contexts. Through cross-domain research collaborations, I aim to build reliable systems that reduce cognitive barriers while preserving human agency.
